Not illustrated. 1917 Excerpt: .its own proposition by treating it in a wholly individual manner. Addressing the City Planning Conference at Kansas City, John Lawrence Mauran, president of the American Institute of Architects, said: The two great enemies of city planning are the scoffer at dreams and the logical candidate for office. The first is that ever-recurring jibe conveyed by the word dreamer. Dreamer in its true sense, the sense in which it applies to us, is very different, for no project with breadth of scope, with farsighted vision, was ever conceived save in the mind of the dreamer who could translate his dream into practical reality. The other obstacle persists in the distinctive American type of know-it-all--the logical candidate for office. This type of man resents above all, the thought that expert opinion on any subject can be superior to, and therefore helpful, to his own. Mr. Joseph L....
