If you wish to leave the school-room, Mr. Saltren, said Arminell, I am prepared to occupy your place with the captive. I thank you, Miss Inglett, answered the tutor. But I have strict orders to go through the devotional exercises with Giles this afternoon, the same as this morning. I will take them for you. You are most kind in offering, but having been set my tale of bricks to make without straw, I am not justified in sending another into the clayfield, in my room. I see--this is a house of bondage to you, Mr. Saltren. You hinted this morning that you meditated an in exitu Israel de Egypto The young man coloured. You tread too sharply on the heels of the pied de la lettre, Miss Inglett. But you feel this, though you shrink from the expression of your thoughts. You told me yourself this forenoon that you were not happy. If you leave us, whither do you propose going? A journey in the wilderness for forty years. With what Land of Promise in view? I have set none before me. None? I cannot credit that. Every man has his Land of Promise towards which he turns his face. Why leave the leeks and onions of Goshen, if you have but a stony desert in view as your pasture? I suppose the heart is a binnacle with its needle pointing to the pole--though each man may have a different pole. South of the equator,...
