Three eases where extirpation was resorted to for the removal of chronic tumors iu the spleen, are on record. Zaccarelli operated, in 1549, the wife of a Greek Onturio, suffering from oppilation of the milt. That organ protruded through the wound made iu the abdomen, was separated from its connection, and taken out. The patient recovered in twenty-four days. But the correctness of this case is doubted by almost all eminent surgical writers. The second operation dates back only to 1826. The patient, a woman, at the a -e of twenty-two, laboring under cirrhosis of the liver and ascites, had acquired a swelling of the milt, from suppression of perspiration and menses, irriscability, c. Tormenting pains in the tumor...
